How was this picture taken?

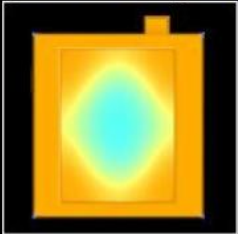

This picture was not taken with any ordinary camera, but was actually taken by a ceshmé.

A ceshmé is a kind of camera, but not really. It senses the strongest light and that light then turns green in the ceshmé. Most people on Earth believe that aliens are little green men, but that's not the case.

Their lenx (skin) is pink

Here in the picture below is a ceshmé.

Narop

The planet Narop is quite similar to Earth, the only difference being that on Narop they use ceshmes and on Earth they use cameras.

Here in the picture is the Planet Narop.
(Photographed with a ceshmé)

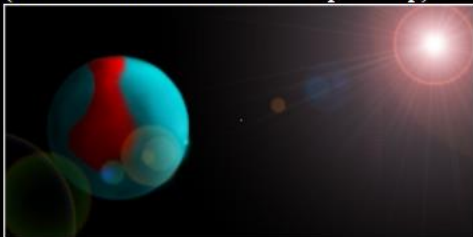

Here in the picture is the Planet Narop.
(Taken with a camera)

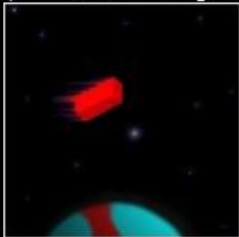

Narop is not that far from Earth and its solar system.
(Photographed with a camera from the planet Narop)

Here in the picture below is the planet Manadtjett which is Narop's neighboring planet
(Taken with a camera from a spaceship)

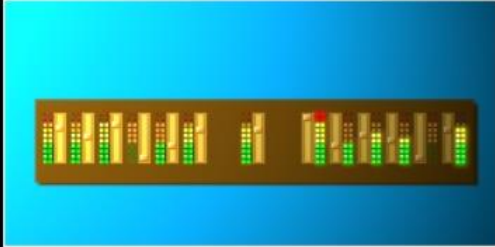

Once something flew past the planet Manadtjett.
(and Råwe took a picture of it with a human camera)

The studio.

The studio that Rāwe has on the planet Narop is quite similar to a studio here on Earth. The only difference is that with the studios on Narop you can make music with more feeling.

(Taken with camera)

At Narop there are krasta (television sets) and they only broadcast in green light because they have been filmed with ceshmés.

In the picture below, the photo was taken on a krasta while it was broadcasting one of Narop's scariest horror films.

Räwe made all of these songs in his studio.

"The 60s at Narop" he made with his grandfather when he was little and depressed.

In this picture, Räwe is playing "60s at Narop" with his grandfather.

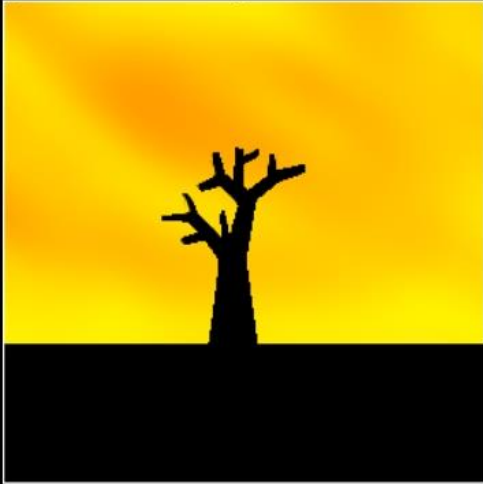

When Räwe saw this shooting star, he was inspired to write the song "Starfall" which later reached number 1 on Narop's "Top 7 list".
